VSEA Responds Quickly To Off-Base Assertion That State Employees Are Not Helping At All To Repair Budget Deficit

VSEA leaders were stunned this week by media reports that a top government official had testified to lawmakers that state employees had come to the table on August 11 with no savings to offer to help Vermont address a recently announced budget deficit of $31 million.

Unfortunately, a few lawmakers bought the line, forcing VSEA President Shelley Martin to attend an August 13 public hearing, where the legislature's Joint Fiscal Committee was taking public comment on the State's proposed budget cuts to reduce the deficit.

"I'm here today to address reports in the media that certain officials are saying state employees aren't helping at all to bring down Vermont's deficit," Martin began. "This is absolutely untrue and I would point to the EGWP changes VSEA members just agreed to this year to help save money." She added that VSEA members also recently agreed to other retirement and health care changes that are already saving the state millions, and she noted that many agencies and departments are still trying to rebound from the RIFs suffered in 2008 and 2009.

Martin ended by reminding lawmakers that it was the General Assembly that allowed a 2010 VSEA-created initiative to invite state employee cost-savings proposals to sunset in 2012, ending the flow of ideas.

"Frontline state employees are the experts and they know where the savings can be found," explained Martin. "It's really too bad this program was allowed to sunset." She added that VSEA is helping to spur more suggestions by actively soliciting cost-savings ideas from members. If you have a cost-savings idea you would like VSEA to consider sharing with the State, please send a brief summary of your idea to VSEA Communications Director Doug Gibson at dgibson@vsea.org. In the subject line, please write "Cost-Savings Idea."

VSEA members are urged to remind their local lawmakers about all that state employees have done in just the past few years to help Vermont balance its budget.

Ahem...New Study Finds VT State Employees Pay Higher Health Care Premiums Than Most

VT Digger reports on August 14 that a new study from the Pew Charitable Trusts found that Vermont state employees, on average, pay higher health care premiums than their counterparts in other states. The article states: "The average per-employee per-month premium for coverage of employees and dependents was $963 in 2013. In Vermont, premiums cost $1,307 on average."

"Given the recent accusation that Vermont state employees aren't helping to reduce the state's deficit, the findings of this study shine an even brighter spotlight on another way VSEA members are helping—actually more than employees in most other states—to reduce Vermont’s continuing budget deficits,” VSEA President Shelley Martin told WIA.

2014 VSEA Annual Meeting WARN Is In The Mail

DCF Workers Get Their Day In Front Of Lawmakers

After enduring months of finger-pointing, accusations and even death threats, VSEA frontline DCF members were at the State House on August 12 to testify in front of a special legislative committee created to investigate everything and everyone related to the recent untimely and tragic death of a two-year-old child. It was the first time lawmakers had heard from frontline workers, and VSEA members Tracey Brown, Patricia Casanova, Alyssa Dawson, Andrew Frowine, Kerrie Johnson, Nancy Miller, Shannon Morton and Neysha Stewart did a terrific job educating lawmakers about the issues that are currently impeding DCF workers' ability to provide adequate service to some very vulnerable Vermonters.

The group focused their remarks on several key areas of concern, including non-manageable caseloads, what constitutes an actual "client", high employee turnover, the depletion of the workforce through past RIFs, communication breakdowns, policies and protocols in need of immediate revision and how the current legal system impacts their work.

Here is an excerpt from A VTDigger story about the hearing:

DCF is “woefully understaffed,” said Nancy Miller, a social services supervisor at the Burlington DCF office. Her colleagues echoed her concerns during more than two hours of testimony in the Statehouse.

“We just do not have enough people,” said Alyssa Dawson, another Burlington DCF social worker.

“I’m triaging my cases,” said Tracey Brown, who also works in Burlington.

“Things will fall through the cracks,” said Patricia Casanova, a St. Albans worker.

“VSEA thanks all these DCF members for having the courage to come to the State House and talk honestly with legislators about the reality for frontline DCF workers,” VSEA President Shelley Martin told WIA. “Many DCF workers we are hearing from are very concerned they are being scapegoated for these tragic deaths, and that is extremely upsetting, which is why this testimony was so important and so needed. This group did an outstanding job stating the case for all Vermont DCF workers.”

VSEA Meetings With DCF Workers Continue!

On August 13, 25-year BGS employee Harry “Jaime” Percey Jr. (pictured here, left) was officially sworn in to a newly created “classified employee” seat on the facility’s Board of Trustees. It’s the first time ever a classified VVH employee has held a seat on the Board. Pictured here swearing Percey in is VVH Board President Joseph Krawczyk.

VSEA Sending Five-Member Delegation To “People’s Climate March” In NYC. Interested?

VSEA President Shelley Martin announced that the union will send five interested members to the “People’s Climate March” in New York City on September 21, 2014. Labor activists from around the country are participating in the march, which culminates two days of action, beginning on September 20.

Here’s a description from the event’s website, describing why labor is participating in the march and other events throughout the weekend:

“Super storm Sandy showed us that climate change is here and that if we do nothing, working families and the most vulnerable will be hardest hit. Workers and union members play an essential role in responding to climate change and extreme weather events – many workers risked their lives to repair infrastructure and keep essential services running in the aftermath of Sandy. By joining this march we challenge the 1% and corporate CEO’s who are responsible for both attacking workers and unions and polluting our environment and causing climate change.”

If you are a VSEA member interested in traveling to New York City September 19-21 to participate in the People’s Climate March, please send a letter of interest by 4:00 p.m., Friday, August 29, to VSEA President Shelley Martin, via email at smartin@vsea.org or by U.S. Mail at VSEA, 155 State St., Montpelier 05602.

175+ Have Already Taken VSEA’s Worksite Survey. Keep Them Coming!

Do you work in an office or a cubicle? Do you carpool to work, drive yourself, bicycle, walk? Are there temporary employees working where you do? What about employees working for a private contractor? How are workers communicating best with each other? Has your workplace moved in the past five years? Do you have trouble finding daily parking?

These are just some of the questions VSEA is asking members to answer in a new survey that is designed to help union staff and leaders become more familiar with specific worksites across Vermont and better determine how certain issues are impacting employees at specific worksites, if at all.

“We’re excited that 175 members have already taken a few minutes on a break, or at home to complete this important survey,” VSEA President Shelley Martin told WIA. “Thanks to your answers, we’re already learning a lot about where VSEA members work and some of the unique problems and issues that exist at some of these worksites.”
